

STEAD'S IDEA OF A POSTAL TIE.

An Ocean Penny Rate Between England and the United States.

WOULD BE A SIGN OF UNION

The Great Editor Says It Would Be a Recognition of International Affinity.

AN ANGLO-AMERICAN ALLIANCE

Claims It Would Furnish the First Step Toward Perfect Understanding Between the Two Countries.

London, July 16.—An article by W. T. Stead, editor of the Review of Reviews, entitled, "The Next Step in the Anglo-American Alliance Should Be Penny Postage with the United States," has just been published in the Chronicle.

The pith of the article is this suggestion: "Now that the British Government is about to make the penny Queen's head universally current through all English-speaking lands under the Union Jack, bearing Australia, why should we not propose at once to the Government of Washington to extend the same privilege to all territories sheltered by the Stars and Stripes? Nothing could more conspicuously and significantly emphasize the fact that this, that in our eyes all the English-speaking world is one world, and that to the dwellers in the homeland of the race the longing for a close, constant and cheap communication is quite as great when their kindred are within the territory of the American Republic as when they are within the tolerably broad limits of the British Empire."

Penny Ocean Postage Sign of Union. In his article Mr. Stead relates the circumstance of the visit of English Postmaster-General Henniker Heaton to Washington in 1890, when he consulted with the then Postmaster-General John W. Wainwright about a penny postage system between England and the United States, and says: "Eight years ago the sense of the unity of the English-speaking brotherhood had not penetrated far enough into the consciousness of the American people to secure a favorable reception for Mr. Henniker Heaton's suggestion that the English speaking peoples should form a unit for a penny post. There were too many Germans in the United States, said Mr. Wainwright, for the American people to dare to propose a penny post, taking Great Britain in and leaving Germany out."

Mr. Stead concludes his article with the following: A Penny Rate to Canada. "The United States for years have had a penny post with Canada. We are now to have a penny post with Canada. Why should we not have a penny post with each other? If we have not penny postage with the United States it will be cheaper for us to post letters for New York to Canada, and then have them re-posted to destination in New York from Canada, which is absurd. What both the English speaking people are waiting for just now is an upward and visible sign of a conscious growth of the sense of unity. Neither side want this sign to take the shape of a postage stamp, but what more conspicuous, useful and innocuous symbol of the fact that in heart we stand closer together than any other nations, than the fact that it costs 100 per cent more to send a letter to any other nation than it does to send a letter to any part of the Queen's dominions, of course always excepting Australia?"

No Fear of Germany. "If any of the politicians in Washington, fearing the German vote should insist upon offering to extend penny postage privilege to the Fatherland, we in England would make no objection. Germany has made no sign of any such intention, and we are sending eyes to Canada. If we offer it to the United States it is too much to hope that, notwithstanding the presence of a war expenditure, the statesman at Washington would cancel welcome such an opportunity of showing that in 1900 the British works of peace the empire and the Republic stand shoulder to shoulder before the world?"
